

CARLOS E. CUEVAS is a Financial Sector Development Adviser at the World Bank, Financial Sector Operations and Policy Department. A specialist in rural finance and microfinance, he manages or participates in World Bank lending operations, sector work and technical assistance primarily in Latin America and Africa. Before joining the World Bank, he was a Senior Microenterprise Specialist at the Inter-American Development Bank (1993-1995) and an Assistant Professor of Agricultural Economics and Finance at The Ohio State University (1984-1993). Mr. Cuevas holds a Masters degree in agricultural economics from the Catholic University of Chile and a Ph.D. in agricultural economics from The Ohio State University. He has published extensively in the fields of rural finance and micro/small enterprise finance. In recent years, he was co-editor and contributor of the special April 1996 issue of the Journal for International Development on “Sustainable Banking with the Poor”, and published “The Relevance and Challenges of Credit Unions Today”, a chapter in Safe Money. Building Effective Credit Unions in Latin America, edited by Glenn Westley and Brian Branch, 2000. Mr. Cuevas has worked extensively on legal and regulatory issues in microfinance, and on building institutional capacity among providers of financial services and in supervisory agencies. He is at present working, with Klaus Fischer of Université Laval - Québec as senior author, a Policy Working Paper on “Cooperative Financial Institutions. Issues in Governance, Regulation and Supervision” forthcoming November 2005.
